Our friendship had a good many ups, and downs, but each time we went through a rough patch, it always returned stronger, and better than ever. I love you , Rose. You haven't left us for you will always live on in our hearts. Perhaps one day we will learn how to accept, and live with the pain. I will never forget you, and all the many good times we shared, along with all the laughter, tears, and secrets, it all is etched in my broken, shattered heart.

Even still not a day goes by that I don't think about you, Rose. Therefore, not a day goes by that I don't shed tears for you. I love you so dearly. I know I don't have to tell you these things, I feel you so close by, watching over us all. I worry about Angie, but you know that. My heart just won't heal, so I can just imagine her pain. Poor little, Emma, seems to be doing a little better, but I still feel her pain as well, I think about our babies in Kentucky, and I really think they are well, and alright. Losing you has left such a huge void, sometimes I'm not sure I can make it anymore. I still drive by your house, and pause, and see us still sitting there talking, and can remember every word spoken between us, and all the plans we made, never thinking that they would never come to fruit. I never thought I would see the day that I would wish to look up, and see a spirit standing there looking at me, but should you ever find yourself with nothing better to do, you certainly know where you would be MORE than welcome. I love you, Rose, FOREVER.
